Five Reasons to Book a Wellness Speaker

1

Escalating Health Care Costs

The average U.S. yearly cost per person for health care is approximately $8,000 and expected to increase dramatically. But, much of these costs are linked to poor lifestyle habits. Companies who encourage employees to take wellness seriously can minimize and manage rising health care costs.

2

Most Illnesses Can be Avoided

Experts report preventable health issues represent 70% of illnesses. Factors like smoking, alcohol consumption, sedentary lifestyle and poor eating habits can be addressed with a wellness initiative.

3

Longer Hours Equal Less Productivity

Studies point to an increasing work week. While fit and healthy employees take pressure in stride and are productive throughout the longer day, unhealthy workers tend to deliver 50% less productivity.

4

More Technology Causes More Health Issues

Greater reliance on technology has increased repetitive stress injuries, low back pain and reduced vision. Plus, employees are more sedentary at work and home. A wellness initiative can help reduce these mounting problems.

5

Stress Levels on the Rise

A recent study notes 78% of Americans consider their jobs stressful and feel levels have significantly increased in the last 10 years. Business leaders are turning to wellness professionals to minimize and manage health-related issues due to stress.
